Sept 2008 – Aug 2009

Research conducted within this project addresses an important issue how individuals who do not participate in voluntary associations could be encouraged to participate and how those individuals who are already involved could be retained, so that they and society can enjoy more of benefits from voluntary associations. According to this study, one of the ways to attain higher participation is to provide individuals with 'participation friendly' employment conditions and experiences. The Fellowship aims to disseminate these findings to academic audiences and practitioner by publishing them in peer-reviewed papers and presenting in conferences for academic audiences and practitioners from voluntary associations sector.
